Ohana is the Hawaiian phrase for family. In Hawaii, there tends to be a strong family connection when growing up in smaller towns. In the ancient days, households in Hawaii tended to be relatively big, frequently 4 or 5 (or more) siblings. And when they have 4 or 5 (or more) children, you become the village, yet you frankly are family. Today households have 1, maybe 2, or 3 kids, creating a twisting to the old definition "Ohana." The English translation of the word Ohana is still family; we enclose the phrase to be utilized in a more open context to have expanded family or pals that are as close as relatives.
